Lord George Gordon made his appearance on Tuef-day again at Guildhall. He wished to receive advice Justice Buller with regard to his witnesses .-Lord George observed, that there was one of his witnesses he could not get at; and he said, although he were ferved with ever fo many subpœnas, he de-clared he would not attend. Mr Justice Buller replied, that he was not the person to apply to for advice Lord George said he had gone to subpæna the Mar-quis of Carmarthen, and that he had been taken into custody by the Guards. Lord George next adverted to some sexters which the Crown Officers had and which were purported by the prisoners of a cer-George). He faid, that a cabal of Roman Catho-lics—Here his Lordship was stopped by the Judge, who observed, that he could not go into all this now. If Lord George would go and make affida-vit of what he had to fay, and lay it before the Court, Mr Justice Buller promised to do what to him should appear to be just.

Lord George seemed to be satisfied with this reply, and left the Court. In about two or three hours afterwards he made his appearance again. He with great politeness asked Mr Justice Buller if he was ready to hear what he had got to fay. Upon being answered Yes, Lord George said, that he had got subprenas from the Crown Office in the regular way; that he had ferved them on Mr Justic Frazer, Lord Carmarthen, and Mrs Fitzherbert .-His Lordship described the manner in which he had ferved thefe fubpoenas; that first of all one fervant answered, and he feemed to be in doubt; he immediately called another in livery; and that he, Lord George, was turned out of the hall; (Lord George did not mention whose hall this was). Mr Justice Buller said he had nothing to do with all this.— Lord George said, he thought it his duty to inform him how matters had been managed at the West end of the town, and how he had been used there. Mr Justice Buller asked him, if he had any thing else to fay? Lord George replied, that he had to request of his Lordship to put off his trial till once the Court could enforce its subpoenas, and make witnesses appear. He faid, it was impossible to do juhim, when his wirnesses could not be compelled to attend. He hoped his Lordship would therefore put off the trial. Mr Justice Baller replied, that he could not put off the trial unless some special reason was stated in an affidavit.

Lord George replied, that he should not, to use his own words, appear the next day on the defensive, but on the offentive, with an affidavit.

He was told the Marquis could not be spoken to ; but his Lordship faid his buliness was so urgent he must see him, and kept knocking at the door for some time, till the anfwer being repeated in a more authoritative tone, his Lordhip thought proper to go off re infeita.

Private letters from Amfterdam inform us, that the riot is that city on the goth ult. hae been attended with much worfe consequences than those men-tioned in the Amsterdam Gazette (from which the article respecting this matter was copied into our last paper. From them we leave, that the houses of two of the principal magistrates, with twenty-eight o-thers, have been pulled down by a mob of the patri-otic party; that many of the rioters had been ap-prehended and immediately hanged; and that the Burgomafler Beels has fince died, entirely owing to the flock he received on this occasion, as no personal idjury had been offered to him.—These letters add, that the moderation with which the Prince of O-range and his friends have acted, has brought over many to their corrections.

"Tumults and confusion in their utmost latitude, fays another letter just received from that city, prevail at Amsterdam; all is anarchy and uproar in this once peaceful seat of industry and affluence.— Fourteen of the Stadtholder's adherents were seized Fourteen of the Stadsholder's adherents were feized in the streets on the second day of the rioting, and hanged by the mob of the opposite party. Military law is proclaimed; all orders for payment of money from the banks are rejected, and two cannons placed in the house of the Hoper; whilst every window of the opulent is planted with musquetry for the protection of their lives and property."

Our last letters from Amsterdam, confirm the general report of the stat insurrections which have happened in that city; adding, that the stames of letter, that they must possibly be checked by the governing powers of the United States. Courtiers, were hourly passing to and from the English, French, Prussian, and Imperial Ministers at the Hague:—and the last advices stated, that a considerable body of Prussian troops were in readiness to march at an of Prussian troops were in readiness to march at an hour's notice in defence of the insulted Stadtholders

The declaration made by his Majesty in the speech from the Throne, indicates the part which Govern-ment mean to take in the struggle in Holland. In addition to this, we have the best authority for faying, that last night a messenger was dispatched to the Hague with categorical instructions to Sir James Harris to quit the station, unless the mediation of the British Court shall be agreed to for reinstating the Stadtholder. Another messenger was yesterday ordered to hold himself in waiting at the Marquis of Carmarthen's Office, to go allo to the Hague

A morning paper says, the public may be affured of the following very important sacts: A messenger who was disparched last week with advices to the Hague, was stopped and pillaged by the Burgo-masters party in Holland. He contrived to secrete the confidential communications to Sir James Harris -but two letters to the Duke of York from Lord Sydney fell into their hands. Whether they contained any confidential communication or not, we know not, but the measure shows us to what lengths they are now proceeding, and that they look on England as having taken a decilive step in the quarrel in favour of the Stadtholder. The messenger now at the Hague is Mr Flint. Extrast of a letter from the Hague, June 2.

" Sir James Harris, the English refident, is turned, invested with new powers, as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary from the British nation. The quick return of that Minister from London, convinces us of the disposition of the Enghith government to become mediators in the differen ces that now distract this Republic; all of which have been brought about by persons, who, perhaps too late lament the misfortunes under which our country labours. Our public funds preserve a tole rable equanimity, though the actions of the East and West India Companies are very much on the decline. The States are now fitting, and as they frequently correspond with the other Provinces the Stadtholder, we hope for fome good in the course of the summer.

Extraft of a letter from Paris, May 31. Extract of a letter from Paris, May 31.

"Subtance of the King's Speech at the breaknp of the Affembly of Notables, on Friday morning, May 25. 1787. His Majety went in state, accompanied by all the Princes, &c. &c. and addressed the Notables in the following words:
"When I chose you, gentlemen, to be members of this worthy affembly, it was with a view that you should assist me with your counsels, and deliver your fentiments with that freedom and truth I have ever been willing to hear. I am thoroughly fatisfied with your indefatigable zeal and attention in examining the objects I have communicated to you. The abuses I have acquainted you with, you have not only properly enquired into, but suggested the means to reform them. It was necessary to bring the expences of the State on a level with the royal revenues; after having very attentively informed yourselves; after having very attentively informed yourselves of the deficiencies, you have pointed out to me the different occommical savings that may be effected, allowing me at the same time to retrieve those temporary losses by provisionary taxes on my subjects. I have this great comfort to think, that the form and method of the new imposts that will take place after your departure, will not be so burdensome as those of former times; the only wish of my heart being that of rendering my people as happy and contented as possible.

my heart being that of rendering my people as happy and contented as possible.

"M. de la Moignon, Keeper of the Seals, spoke next, and in a short, but very sensible speech, made a parsial comparison between the ancient and prefere manner of national assemblies, said his Majesty had not been mislaken in chasing from among the rest such worthy Notables, who had answered in their vigilant investigations his most sanguine sopess who had furnished to the world a most affecting scene of generous emulation between the sphieds.

their vigilant inveltigations his most fanguine hopes; who had furnished to the world a most affecting seene of generous emulation between the subjects and their beloved monarch. They had manifested in short that strong and innountable attachment to the Crown, which is a characteristic so inherent to the Crown, which is a characteristic so inherent to the French, that it may really be called the patriotism of the nation. He concluded by expressing his Majesty's wish and desire, that the same zeal, spirit, and unanimity may prevail in all Provincial Assemblies, as in that lately held at Versailes.

"M. de Brienne (the Archbishop of Toulouse) complimented the Notables for having generosity renounced all personal and hereditary privileges, that is to say, for having consented that all taxes whatever for the future should be equitably distributed among individuals, and no longer expose the men whose revenue is but small, to pay more than those who possess and endeavoured to prove the necessity of the clergy's and the nobility's enjoying the precedency in them. "This prerogative, says the Archbishop, is only dear to them, inasmuch as it contributes to the people's advantage. It is not a vain equality the people should claim, for every day shews it cannot substitute of the necessary wants they are constantly exposed to; it is protection and support the people's weakness requires; and it is from the shifts of pression and outerly to the industrions shulbandman. Besides, when once it is agreed that the contributions shall be equitably levied, the rich and the powerful will become the means of protecting the poor and the feeble."

"M. de Brienne, after having mentioned the reforms that have taken place in the Cultoms department, such as abolishing the coveres, the removing forms that have taken place in the Customs department, fuch as abolifting the corvees, the removing the inland duties at the frontier towns, the suppref-sion of the Gabelle, &c. entered on the grand obfion of the Gabelle, &c. entered on the grand ob-jed of economy. He rated the deficiency in the finances at 140 millions, and intimated the ways and means he proposed to adopt. "The first, says he, will be a saving of 40 millions in his Majesty's household only. The Queen herself has given or-ders to retrench some superfluities. His Majesty's Royal Brothers have agreed to refund the overplus of their annual establishments, that the Treasury may regain by degrees its former credit. His Majefty's rable, his chafe, the post houses expenses, the possions he graciously grants, his studs, and in short every article susceptible of the least economy, thall undergo the necessary reform. Every year our gracious monarch will submit an account of hisreceipts and expenditures to the examination of a Council of Finances, formed on a different plan than that now existing; his Majesty perceiving that the present one is rather imperfect and insufficient. The Archbishop concluded with many flattering compliments to the assumbly.

" Monfieur (the King's eldest brother) addreffed his Majesty in the following words: "The honour, Sire, of being one of the first gentlemen your Majesty has assembled on this grand occasion, is extremely precious to me, as it affords me the noble advantage of being the organ of their voice to you. Being confulted by your Majefly on subjects of the greatest importance, we have freely given our opinion, and acted with that zeal and loyalty that have at all times distinguished the French nobility. The kind approbation your Majesty has been plea-fed to bestow on our feeble esforts is the greatest re-ward we could hope for or receive. Nothing remains now but to entreat your Majesty to accep our fincerest thanks for the trust so generously reposed in us, and to conceive with your wonde reposed in us, and to conceive with your goodness, the cordial effusions of our unbounced love and respectful attachments to your facred

"The persons who rose after Monsieur, who M. Dillon, Archbishop of Narboune, who for the clergy; M. d'Aligre, First President of Paris; M. Nicolai, First President of la Chambres des Comptes; M. Barentin, New President of la Cour des Aides; M. l'Abbe de la Pere, who spoke for the Netberlands; and M. Peletier, the Prevot des Marchands (like the Lord Mayor)."

LORD GEORGE GORDON.

WEDNESDAY, Lord George Gordon was tried before Mr Justice Buller, at the Court of King's Beach, Guildhall, London, on an information for having written and published a pamph-let, entitled, "A Petition to Lord George Gordon from the prisoners in Newgate, ptaying for his interference, and that he would fecure their liberties, by preventing them from being fent to Botany, Bay."

This strange performance being read, appeared to be a farrago of vague reasoning and absurd reference, interlarded with a great number of feripture phrases. The passage quoted in the information was to the following purpose:—"At a time when the nations of the earth endeavour wholly to follow the laws of God, it is no wonder that we, labouring under our fevere fentences, should cry out from our dungeons, and affe redrefs. Some of us are about to fuffer execution, without righteoufness, and others to be fent off to a barbarous country. The reprofanely altered by men like ourselves. The bloody laws against us have been enforced under a nominal administration, by mere whitened walls, men who possess only the shew of justice, and who have mned us to death contrary to law, &c. &c.

The Attorney General opened the profecution by remarking, that nothing could be more obvious than the purpose for which this publication was intended. It purposted to be an address to Lotd George Gordon; but, as it would appear, had been a Sually written by himself, with a view either to raise a sunty. mult among the priforers within, in an endeavour re procure their deliverance, or by exciting the com-passion of those without, to cause a disturbance, and produce the fame effect. It was now but a few years fince he faid, without meaning any particular application in the prefere instance, that the citizens London had feen those effects completed, which this pamphlet went to produce; and the confequences were too well known to need a repetition. It included the law and the judges in indifcriminate abufe. He would not contend for absolute perfection in the former; but those who condemned our laws thould not reside under their jurisdiction. The criminal law was no where attended to with more care, or enforced with fo much lenity. This, however, had nothing to do with the prefent case, as the defendant had sufficiently shown by his conduct, that information was not his object.

John Pitt, the turnkey of Newgate, was then called. He depoted, That in the month of December last, Lord George Gordon had repeatedly visited the Lodge, and asked to see the prisoners, particularly those under sentence of death, which request was as often denied. On the publication of the pamphlet in question, Lord George, he said, had seet a copy to bim, the witness, and others to an, and Mr Villette the Ordinary. days after, he found a man and woman diffri buting them in great numbers, at the doors of the prison. In consequence of this, he waited on the desendant at his house, in Welbeck Street, and told him that there was fad averk about the distribution of the bampine. I would Lara George repned, at No matter, let them came on as foon as they pleafe: at I am ready for them. - He then faw a great num. her of the books in the room, and took one to Mi Akerman, at Lord George's particular defire; and also gave a direction to the residence of those perfons who had diffributed the pamhplets in the Old

The records of the conviction of feveral persons were then read and authenticated; and Akerman, and Hall, the keeper of the new goal, Southwark, were called on for the purpole of proving that there existed at the time, convicts of the same description as those who were supposed to have addressed the pamphlet to the desendant.

Lord George Gordon asked the witnesses, severally, Whether he had ever any conference with the persons mentioned in the record? To which they replied in the negative.

He then entered on his defence, which was delivered in a defultory manner, and made up of materials as heterogeneous as ever went to fuch a composition A perty fraud, he said, committed in his own family, had first drawn his attention to the laws against felony, when he found that it constituted a capital crime, though the fum taken was no more than eighteen pence. He then entered into a history of our criminal law, from the time of Athelstan, for the purpose of proving that code in meaning for the purpose of proving that code in its present state to be by much too sanguinary. This, he said, was a subject which struck his heart. He had communicated his ideas to Lord Mansfield, and to the Recorder, who had admitted their propriety; and to the Recorder, who had defired him to put his thoughts on paper. This was all he had done in the prefent inflance. His idea was only to enlarge the powers of the Judges; though wicked lawyers had attributed to him another intention. He quo ted the act of Parliament for fending the convicts to South Wales, as a proof that the Legislature thought with him on the Subject. He quoted the Gazette of last Saturday, as a proof of his Majesty's atten-tion to God's laws, which, he said, were directly contrary to the present practice; and he assured the Court, that if he had time to send for his books, he could shew them, that every word of his pamphlet was actually in the Bible!

He complained very much of those vexatious pro-fecutions which were inflirated against him. He quoted Blackstone's Commentaries, Book IV. cap. 25. who says, "that informations filed ex officio, by the Attorney General, are proper only for such enormous misdemeanours, as peculiarly tend to disturb or endanger the King's government, and in the punishment or prevention of which a moment's delay would be statal. This, he said, had by no means appeared in his case, as one of the info gainst him had been pending for ten, and the other for fix months. This extraordinary mode was thereore a grievance on him, which was not justified, as appeared, by any preffing necessity. He exhorted bage Buller not to lose the present opportunity of ingly.

instructing the jury on the disputed point, whether they were to judge of law as well as of fact .- He ined, that fpies had been fet over him by the Treasury for several months; and concluded with repeating his declaration, that his object had been reformation, not tumult.

Judge Buller having briefly fummed up the evilence, remarked that there could be no doubt of the fact of the defendant's having written and published the libel, the former of which he had actually confeffed. There remained, therefore, only to determine whether the averments in the information were equally true; that is, whether the Judges of the different courts, his Majesty's law officers, were those alluded to, on which she jury were to deter-

The jury, without helitation, returned their verdie, GUILTY.
KING AGAINST WILKINS.

Mr Wilkins was the printer of the above paper, under the directions of Lord George Gordon. Without entering into particulars, which were not contested, the proof was brought home to him. In his defence, he made a very cool, deliberate, and fensible speech, in which he folemnly protested, in question, that it contained any thing obnoxious to the government of the country: That he never had fold any of them; and he believed only two paths. that he knew not, at the time of printing the paper pers had been delivered out of the house, belides the proof floets; all the others had been delivered to Lord George Gordon. It would be a dreadful fituation indeed, if a printer of private works was to be answerable for every thing he executed for his customers. It was not a time to refuse an order, even should it be only to the value of four or sive pounds, when public and parochial taxes were to enormoutly high. He could not be expected to be a lawyer, verted in every critical definition of words and phrafes, fo as to know what constituted a libel; or what might be fafely printed, as not being under that predicament. Upon the whole, he contended, s conduct by no means could be centured, as he had done nothing more than any tradefman would have done in the fame fituation.

The Jury paid great attention to this defence; but the evidence was directly in point.—Guilty.
KING AGAINST LORD GEORGE GORDON.

This was upon an information by the Attorney General, for a liber published in the Public Advertifer, against Monfieur Bartholomew, the French Charge d'Affaires, and Count d'Adhemar, the French Minister at this Court.

A fresh special Jury being called over, Lord George flated fome particulars respecting his at-tempting to subpoena Mrs Fitzherbert to give evidence at the trial. The Jury were then fworn, and Mr Law opened the prefecution, by flating the particulars, and reading the paragraph from the newf-

Mr Attorney General opened the particulars of the case to the Court and Jury, and faid, that a-mongst the great number of libellous papers which the Gentleman now before the Court had published, it feemed to be strange that he should go so far out of his way, as to libel the French Ambassador, or have no view whatever, but to create a mifunder-flanding between the two Courts. The characters of Gentlemen representing their Sovereign were not thus wantonly to be attacked; otherwife no man could ever ferve as an Ambassador from any foreign Court, to the Court of London; because they would be under the apprehension of having themfelves attacked in the public papers, and held up as base and infamous characters, as public spies, with out any opportunity of gaining redrefs; for it was not to be supposed that an Ambassador would, or, indeed, could condefcend, like a private person, to bring his action for damages. The Count, finding himself thus wantonly attacked, sent to the printer, who immediately gave him up Lord George as the author; and that he had received directions in the first instance to give him up, if entited upon. He would give his Lordship credit for his openness of conduct.

Upon this fact being represented to him, he, as Actorney General, had exercifed the powers which the constitution had wifely given him, and had as speedily as possible, consistent with the nature of such a proceeding, filed the information against the defendant. His first idea was to have profecuted both the author and publisher; but Mr Henry Woodfall having fo speedily given up the author, and having consented to be called as a witness, it would be rather bearing too hard to commence a prosecution against him. The present prosecution was, therefore, in every respect, so proper and necesfary to be carried on, that he could find only one objection to it, namely, that it would give the fame person another opportunity to behave insolent to the Courts of Justice, and to treat his Majesty's government with contempt. The Attorney then related the circumstance of Lord George taking Count Cagliostro in the coach to the French Minister's ; and discoursing about an overture, sa'd to have been made to Caglioftro to return to France. That the libel appeared the next day. After having made feveral other observations to shew the nature of the offence, he fubmitted it to the Jury, whether fuch proceedings ought not to be punished, as tending to create a misunderstanding between two Courts, which were upon the firstest reims of amiry and friendship. In justice likewise to the individual, whose character was so unjustly attacked; it was necessary that the Court and Jury should pronounce their judgment upon it.

Mr Bearcroft then called John Bolts, who purchased two newspapers at Mr Woodfall's, Ivy The paragraphs were read, and they agreed with the words of the information.

Henry Sampson Woodfall. - Are you the printer and publisher of those papers?—Yes, I am.

Who did you receive the copy from?—Lord George Gordon.

Have you the original writing?—Yes.

Mr Latten, the deputy clerk, read the manuferipts, and Lord George examined the record after

As the papers were read, his Lordship discovered some trifling difference in the words, though he faid he did not mean to take the advantage of them.

At length the reader came to the names of Count D'Adhemar, which was written in the manuscript D'Ashemar. Lord George compared it with the record, and found it was d'Ashemar. This created momentary builtle, as a militake in the name must have been fatal, until the Attorney General recollefted that there was a particular Count, charging a libel to the defendant against the Count, by the stile, name, and description of D'Ashemar. Lord George the Attorney General need not have given himfelf any trouble, as he should not have availed himfelf of the mistake.

The paper being read, Lord George questioned Mr Woodfall.

Have I not for many years communicated mat-ters to you respecting public affairs?—Yes. Did not I authorise you to give me up as the author ?-Yes. When I gave you the paper, did you apprehend was a libel? - The Court stopped the question.

Mr Fraser, of the Secretary office, was next, and he proved that D'Adhemar was the Ambassador at Court, and that Barrholomew was Charge ffaires. That he was introduced as fuch at the office in the cuftomary manner.

Lord George. Do you know any thing of D'Adhemar's family at Paris?—No. Don't you know that he is of very low and mean extraction? - I do not

Don't you know that he bears a bad character in Paris :- The Court stopped him, by observing, that these questions tended to nothing, as the Count was Ambassador at this Court.

The evidence being closed, Lord George made what he called his defence. He first began with stating the distinction between the two families of d'Adhemar and d'Ashemar. The last was a family of honour and rank, whereas the latter was an upilart, who being plaufible and elever, had pushed himself forward to the notice of men in authority, " very much fuch another man as Jenkinson was, -a most hearty laugh. When Count Cagliostro came to England, after having been acquitted by the Parliament of Paris-the same person that robbed him of his plate and jewels, which were depofited at a banker's, procured, through the influence of the Queen, an order to exile him; in order to keep him out of his property. That his vengeance did not flop here; for he continued to publish base, falfe, and infamous paragraphs about him in the papers, particularly, in the Courier de l'Europe. This newspaper was under the immediate patronage and direction of Count d'Adhemar. Caglioftro therefore threw himself under the protection of his Lordthip, to extend what influence he might have in his favour in this country. This Count d'Adhemar had a wife, who was a convenient woman to the Oueen of France. It was necessary to go into these particulars, as he had been charged with having libelled the Queen of France; whereas it was impoffible, as it was known what her character was in every street in Paris. The Court was going to in-terpose, and stop this irregular discourse; but Lord George, with a marked emphasis, said, he declared it in the face of the Court, that the French Queen was as a stee Empress of Russia.

Mr Attarnsy General observed—you are a disgrace to the name of an Englishman! Lord George then continued-After Count Cagliostro had published his case in England, it was a back to France if possible; for that reason, a person had waised upon him, to shew him an order from Breuteil, purporting, that the order of exile was annulled; but the person would not deliver the paper to him; so that if, upon these affurances, Cagliostro had been allured to return to France, to recover his property, there would have been an order of exile flanding against him at the office of police, without his having any written authority to shew it was an-nulled; and thus he would have been taken into custody, and perhaps never again heard of. It was in order to have this matter elucidated. that his Lordship, with Count Cagliostro, waited upon the French minister, where not receiving the information they expected, the paragraph in question was written and published. He contended it was no libel, as it contained nothing but truth in favour of Count Cagliostro, who had as much right to the protection of the laws as Count d'Adhemar, or any other foreigner.—He had nothing further to add, but lest his case to the Jury.

After a short charge from the Bench, the Jury instantly returned their verdict, Guilty. Lord George Gordon afked when fentence would be passed in consequence of these verdicts, and was answered, that would come on of course in the commencement of the next term.

Lord George then very deliberately put up his papers, and walked off,

The counsel for the profecution were the Attorney and Solicitor General, Mess. Erskine, Bearcroft, Baldwin, and Law. On the other fide, Lord George Gordon flood alone, and pleaded his poverty as an excuse for having neither advocate nor

The mention of the affairs of Holland in Majesty's speech had some effect on our funds but they have been rising ever since -a proof that Dutch war would not have the effect now it had for merly, when we were in alliance with them, and when this country might have been expected to take an active part.

Several families of distinction have lately arrived from Holland to refide here for a time, until some decifive steps are taken to quell the tuniults which prevail in that distracted Republic.

In case the Anti-Orange prevail in the United Provinces, and the Stadtholder be deposed, an entire revolution may be expected in their constitu-tion, and whether, for the better or the worse-let the French saction, which are at the bottom of

Should the present disturbances in Holland rife to any height, France, no doubt, will have an eye to the Cape, as well as to the Spice Islands -- and will take care of those valuable possessions for their good friends the Burgomasters.

The Amsterdam Gazette of May 31, contains the following intelligence: On the 30th of last month 300 rioters affembled together in Amsterdam, to destroy the hoases of Mr Van Ernston, a laceman, a bookseller of the name of Arends, the Burgomaster Rendorps and the Burgomafter Dedel-all of them men eminencey and attached to the Prince of The latter had previously received a hint of their in-tention, and prepared himself for the event. In attempting to break open his house, they were relisted by a party conceafed within, on which a builtle enfued, and many lives were loft on both fides. They then went to the houses of the Burgomafter Beels, which they plundered of every thing they met with. Many more houses were destroyed on the same day by the mob appointed by the fame party. Thus fays the Amflerdam Gazette : but we have received the following particulars through a private channel :- That a riot had happened in Amiterdant on the 30th of May, which grew to fuch an amazing height, that a mob of the patriot party, to the number of 200 and upwards, affembled and pulled down two of the Burgomafters houses, and 28 others, whose names are particularly mentioned; that in consequence many of the rioters were apprehended, and immediately hung up in terrerem the rest. The Burgomaster Beels is fince dead, but it is faid to have proceeded entirely from ap-having received any particular injury.

On Wednesday, the Dutch Ambassador gave in elegant dinner to our Ministry, and the foreign Mi niffers, prefided by the French Ambaffador, to which were invited the Ducs de Polignae and de Guiche; and afterwards the whole company went to spend the evening at Ranelagh.

It is reported, that the French Ambassador is fuddenly recalled, and that he will immediately leave this country.

A very serious demur has happened in the outlet of the commercial intercourse with France, which by no means augurs well of its operation. By the treaty, both the high contracting parties agreed to appoint Confuls on the footing of the most favoured nation. In France, Confuls have very high privilecs - in this country they have none. The French, it feems, require that the principle of reciprocity shall be preserved in this particular, as well as in all the rest, and that their Confuls shall have equal pin vileges in England that the English shall enjoy in France. This has not been complied with on our parts, as the laws of the land fupply every affiftance which can be necessary. The consequence is, however, that the French, on their parts, have not fuffered the English ships to unload; and the late wine act requiring that all wine should be loaded with the certificate, which should be signed by the Consul, no ships with French wines on board have been suffered to unload in our ports but with a permission from the Treasury. The appointment of Consuls is the the Treasury. The appointment of Consuls is the oftensible reason given for the conduct of france; but there are not wanting those who affert, that the true occasion is -a secret article which has not been complied with by us.

Whatever may be the true reason of the interruption, there is one thing certain and alarming, That there have been immense imports of brandy and other articles not checked by the late wine act, and that on our part the exports have been con ly nothing. There is not one ship at present in the river taking in goods for France.

Indeed the whole conduct of France is pregnant with alarm. They have by an arret, as our readers have feen, opened a certain number of ports fo pose Dea

Yesterday a cause was heard in the Court of King's Bench, Guildhall, in which Mons. Des Enfans, a collector of pictures, was plaintiff, and Mons. Vandergucht, defendant. The contest was respecting a picture, which the latter had sold to the former for 600 l. as the genuine production of Pourin. Some doubts, however, arising, whether it was really from the pencil of that maker, Monf. Des Enfans brought the present action, for the amount of the price, which he had given. - After a long hearing, in the course of which Mr Gainsto-rough, Mr West, Mr Copley, and upwards of twen-ty other artists and connoisseurs were examined, a terdict was given for the plaintiff.—The opinions, however, were fo various and contradictory, that ho-hell Jack Lee could not but exclaim with Sterne, a of all the cants that are canted in this canting world, there is none to tormenting as the cant of eriticism."—A French Gentleman, who was examined on the part of the plaintiff, excited much laughter, by declaring it as his opinion, that the

The prifoner is of middle stature, and very genteel. The interrogatories that were put to him, and his replies, being of a fingular nature, we shall state them verbatim as they occured.

The Magistrate who presided on the bench, first asked Gentleman Harry to what profession he was bred, and how he had been educated? - to which he replied, " It was of very little confequence to his worthip, and begged of him not to ask any quehis worship, and begged of him not to ask any questions that did not apply to the case; for it was, he observed, only wasting his Worship's precious time to answer them."—The Magistrate, irritated at his consummate effrontery, told him—"That he was as great a rascal as any in England."—"That (replied Gentleman Harry) is language which at once betrays your ignorance as a Magistrate, and your illiberality as a man; and if you were younger than you are, and not fitting on that bench, you should meet me as a gentleman, for this imparalled conduct."—"I don't wish to meet you any where (replied his Worship) for I am persaaded you where (replied his Worlftip) for I am persuaded you would rob me if you had it in your powers'You might make yourfelf eafy on that fcore (replied the prisoner) for I believe you have nothing to lose." The bench told him he bad better be filent, othe should suffer for his infolence. "Gentlemen, (faid the prisoner) I am persuaded that you will show me no favour, and I will not suffer you tarnely to infult me, in this unfortunate predicament." The prisoner offered no defence, but read the depolitions made against him by the Duke of Beaufort, his Grace's footman, and one of the Court Marshalsyrace's tootman, and one of the Court Marthat-men; he politely thanked the Duke of Beaufort for his kumanity, in interpoling to prevent the mob from offering him performs riolence when he was appre-hended; he was then conveyed to Newgate. At the diving at Guildhall, in the King's Bench, the following.

the following canse was tried t - On Tuesday Hay verfus Haldimand :- This was in action of trespals and false imprisonment, brought by the plaintist. Mr Charles Hay, a wine-cooper of Quebec, against Sir Frederick Haldimand, as Gogenor of that province, for arrefting him on sufpi-tion of high treason, as a man disaffected to the king's government and measures, during the late hippies with America, and consining him to a loath-

Mr Bearcroft, counfel for the plaintiff, opened the case with all the brilliancy of a young orator, and with that mature judgment which results from great experience -he proved the warrant of commitment, dated toth April 1780. Igned by H. S. Crummey, by order of his Excellency the Gover-nor; and the term of the imprison ment was candid-ly admitted by the other side.

Mr Arthur Murphy, on the fame fide with Mr Bearcroft, examined feveral witneffes, particularly Hector M Cawley, who proved that the plaintiff was arrested and feat to the Prevost, the military prison, 16 feet by 24, along with feven other pritoners, the fish and nastiness of which was so excessive, that the plaintiff's health was considered. the plaintiff's health was confiderably impaired; that all access to him was denied; and that his wife could only procure an interview by means of difguifing herfelf in the habit of a Canadian woman; it was also in evidence, that for a considerable length of time, the prisoners were obliged to per-form the necessities of nature in a large tub which from the necessaries of nature in a large tub which stood in one corner of the room.

Several depositions also were read, which proved, that at the single of Quebec, Mr Hay had resuled to take an active part in desceding the place, and had with many other gentlemen, on the Governor's proclamation for that purpose, retired from the

The profecutor's case being thus proved,
Mr Erskine, for the desendant, made a most animated speech. He represented Sir Frederick Halmated speech. The represented by his Majesty in a mated speech. He represented Sir Frederick Haldimand as a foreigner employed by his Majesty in a war of much difficulty; who, with the exception of a sew Sovereign Princes, was the only foreigner who ever obtained any title in this country; and who deserved it the more, as the only province now remaining out of our extensive empire in America, was preserved by the activity, and meritorious services of this foreigner, who was the desendant in the present action. His Majesty had intrusted him, by a commission (which he then read) with the fullest powers, not only military but civil, which would be a sufficient justification against the process now dea fufficient justification against the process now de-pending. But independent of the authority with which he was invested, and the circumstances which which he was invelted, and the circumstances which hed him to the proceeding, he hoped the Jury would in the first instance reflect on what would be the reasoning of every officer in future, when his personal fecurity was opposed to that of the state. It was not to be imagined, that every officer was sufficiently a lawyer to know what may be the point of law in every part of his conduct; nor would it be very adviseable to make it a necessary consideration for a General, under overst exigencies, to ressent how the General, under great exigencies, to reflect how the measures he might be inclined to take, would be ap-proved of by a Jury at Guildhall. Waving, how-ever, every defence of that kind, he would rest the defence chiefly on the discretion and authority which his Majesty's commission afforded the defendant; and would contend, that Sir Frederick Haldimand was not only justifiable, but extremely meritorious, in what he had done.

He then produced General M'Lean, as a witnefs, who proved, that on the prospect of Quebec being belieged by General Arnold, he, as Deputy-Governor, had fummoned the inhabitants, and had required their affiltance to defend the place; but that Mr Hay among others had refused so to do; that some time after this, two men were apprehendthat fome time after this, two men were apprehended in the woods, one of which, Kenny, appeared to be a fervant to Mr Hay; that two bills for 150 l. with a letter of credit to a Mr Cruden, was found upon Kenny, with a certificate from his old mafter, of his fidelity and fervice, couched in very equivocal and ambiguous terms I that he, General M Lean, had transmitted this intelligence to General Haldi-man, with his suspicions that the certificate in que-stion was calculated only for the purpose of recom-mending him to the rebels, the better to summer the disposition which then substituted of joining the Anie-rican and French army, to reduce Quebec. A variety of other minute circumstances fully proved that Mr Hay very much disapproved of the American war; but no evidence of absolute disloyalty was given against him.
Sir H. Clinton confirmed the account of the province of Canada being threatened with an attack from the French and Americans conjunctively, at the time of this imprisonment.

General Robinson's teitimony went to the fame

The whole evidence being closed,
Mr Bearcroft replied to Mr Erskine, and stated that the conduct of General Haldimand, however injudicious, was by no means to be considered as intentionally wrong. He also admitted, that he was invested with a commission of civil as well as mili tary authority; but he at the same time contended, that at the time this violence was committed, the province of Canada was in the most profound peace; the act for suspending the habeas corpus act was fully expired, and there was no legal ground whatever for committing the plaintiff. Nor was there any power to be delegated from the conflictational privileges of this country, which could authorife fuch a commitment as that under which the plainfuch a commitment as that noder which the plain-tiff was confined of "Being kept in Eurody till further orders." He defied his opponents to men-tion any act which could justify such a proceeding under any enquiry, and the more fo, as there wa no legal proof of even fufficient ground for fufficion of misconduct in Mr Hay.

Judge Buller, in his charge to the Jury, said in admitted of no dispute, but that the defendant wa invested, by his commission, with powers as well civil as military, but confidered it at the fame time e qually evident, that, in the present transaction, he acted solely in his civil capacity. He was equally sensible, that there was no law which could justify fuch a commitment as that which affected the plain tiff; nor was the defendant, in his civil capacity, admitted to receive any other fulpicion to julify commitment, but what was given on oath—a requi-fite which, in this case, was wholly dispensed with. The only question then for the Jury was, whether the ground was laid sufficiently strong; which, af-

fome cell, during the space of three years and fixteen | ter recapitulating the various points of evidence, appeared to him by no means to be the cafe. He re-commended, notwithstanding, that the Jury might take into their consideration the motives on which the General acted, which certainly were good ones; and, therefore, without confidering whether he had any chance of being reimburfed by the public or not, they should pay some attention to his motives in the damages they might award, should they give a verdict for the plaintiff.

It is thought that the present contest in Fife will not be inferior in keeness to any of the former. On Thursday last, came on before the Justices of the Peace for the country of Edinburgh, a trial of a most important nature to this country. It was for the surfecture of 21 cases of Geneva removing from the rectifying stock of Mr Stein of Kilbegie to Edinburgh, accompanied with permits, as Geneva

The Excise officers maintained, that it was foreign Geneva; and that it was of a quality greatly superior to any British made gin. Some of the most respectable officers in the Excise, and rectifiers of the greatest skill, were examined on the part of the profecutor, all of whom swore to the excellent quality of the Geneva; that it was equal to foreign. One of the rectifiers acknowledged that he would have thought is foreign, if he had not purchased some of the same quality, made by Mr Stein. Many persons in Court talted the spirits, and agreed, that if it was not foreign, it was equally good. Mr Stein brought his servants, who made the spirits, and put them in the easies; the carters who removed the spiritary and other pursons where the carters stopped by the way, to prove the manusasture and identity thereof. A sample was also brought over from Mr Stein's rectifying house; of some of the same Geneva still remaining on hand, of about 3000 gallons, all prepared in the same vat, which agreed precisely with that seized.—The Court, as well as the conductors of the profection in this country, and the Court ordered the sories to be restored a but, in respect of the significant of th this valuable branch of manufacture brought to fuch perfection in this country, and the Court ordered she fpirits to be reftored; but, in respect of the similarity of these spirits to foreign, and the bithered general belief of the country, that no Geneva could be made in Scotland of such a quality, they found that the officers were entitled to a certificate of a probable cause of seizure,
